

MEDBURY

Says One Country Postmaster Wanted Two-Cent Stamps Printed in Orange, So They'd Match His Wall Paper.

By JOHN P. MEDBURY.

Postmaster-General Hays says that people who live in the country must put their rural delivery mail boxes near the road, so the postman can put your bills in their without leaving his buggy.

Very few of these postmen are lazy, but one guy made application for mail carrier in a village where nobody lived but hermits.

He said he didn't care how many letters he had to go out and deliver as long as the people came and called for them.

He said he'd take the job in spite of the fact that he had to furnish his own carriage. If he had a horse he could use a horse and buggy if he had a buggy.

He's like Edison, he's always thinking. He's trying to think of some way to deliver the mail without getting out of bed.

A special delivery stamp requires extra speed, but his horse can't go faster than it always does, but whenever you pay a dime extra for a stamp he'll whip the horse.

He'll deliver the letter the same day it comes in, if it takes him three days to do it.

He never heard about Frank Bacon, but he thinks Benjamin Franklin wrote "Lightnin'."

He told Mr. Hays that he was used to working in a one-horse town, but he moved out when they got another horse.

He lost all his money and he

DRYS TO FIGHT JUDGE'S ORDER IN BREW CASES

Harrison Decision Freeing Malt and Hop Dealers Declared Menace to Prohibition.

By International News Service.

Prohibition officials today were filled with consternation when Police Judge Harrison's decision quashing a warrant against a malt and hop dealer, who had been raided, led to a general move to resume sale of home brew materials upon a large scale in Washington.

Judge Harrison's decision did not pass upon the specific right to sell malt and hops for home brewing. But it was far-reaching in its effect, because it declared void the search warrants used by dry agents in their raids of the malt and hop dealers.

Scores of dealers, selling beer-making compounds were put out of business recently by Commissioner Haynes order.

The decision will be appealed by the Government and until the case is acted upon by a higher court, dry law officers will pursue a "hands off" policy, so far as the home brew ingredient dealers are concerned.
